StormStock Captures Super Blizzard "Nemo"

The weather intercept team at StormStock captured dramatic footage of Super Blizzard Nemo as it impacted parts of the northeast US coastal region in early February. The storm dumped more than 30 inches of snow in a band from Long Island, New York to Connecticut, stranding motorists and knocking out power to thousands of residents. Hurricane force wind gusts were measured at several weather stations throughout the area. "I noted a pressure reading as low as 978 millibars as the cyclone tracked slowly up the coast, which is impressive," said StormStock cinematographer and founder Martin Lisius. Shots include cars buried in snow, storm waves crashing against a seawall and neighborhoods encased in a mix of snow and ice, all on HD. NHNZ Moving Images Set to Expand Following Acquisition

David Haslingden, who left his role as boss of Fox's Networks division late last year, has bought up factual production houses NHNZ, Singapore-based Beach House Pictures and Australia's Northern Pictures. For NHNZ Moving Images - which is part of NHNZ - this collection of production houses brings a boon of imagery to the archive. With content ranging from Northern PicturesKakadu for ABC and footage from BHP's slate of shows for a host of international broadcasters, NHNZ Moving Images archive collection will be going through a huge growth spurt in the next few months, says NHNZ Moving Images Director Caroline Cook.

"Having this stable of production houses that we are now closely associated with gives us a real strength in archive. We will continue to represent the collections we always have represented, but having this huge range of genres and content at such close proximity is a real position of strength."
